Alexander Clayton-Payne has many discoveries to show, among them an unrecorded watercolour made by the “most versatile British designer of the 18th century” William Kent (1685-1748), whilst he was studying, travelling and working in Italy between 1709 and 1719 with his patron Thomas Coke, who later commissioned Holkham Hall from Kent. This work joins a very small group of surviving drawings which date from Kent’s early developmental period.
